LUNACY BOARD TO EXAMINE RICHESON FOR SECOND TIME

Eventful Week for Murderer of Avis Linnell Starts Today.

BOSTON, May 12.-The week which begins today will be fateful for Clarence V. T. Richeson. Some time during the next few days, probably on Wednesday, his future will be determined by the eight members of the executive council, who will decide whether there is any merit in his petition for the commutation of the death sentence imposed upon him for the murder of Avis Linnell, in case the alienists find the prisoner is or has been insane.

Yesterday a lunacy commission Governor Foss' selection-Dr. Henry tedman, of Brookline, chairman of the oard of trustees of the Taunton Insane Hospital; Dr. George T. Tuttle, superintendent of the McLean Insane Hospital, and Dr. Henry P. Frost, superintendent of the Boston State Hospital, subjected Richeson to a rigid examination that consumed nearly two hours.

Today it became evident that the trio of experts were not entirely satisfied as to the mental condition of their subject," for this afternoon they will further examine him, and it is not altogether improbable that still further investigation into the prisoner's mental status will be continued tomorrow.

The strongest point indicative of possible insanity was the discovery by the allenists that many parts of Richeson's body are insensible to the prick of a gold pin.

Examination Searching.

The examination was most searching and through it all Richeson appeared sager to answer any and all questions He heard the name of the murdered girl spoken without a tremor and he heard without the slightest display of emotion

May Still Be Executed.

According to well-known authorities, even though the ex-minister escapes the death chair temporarily on the ground of insanity at the present time, he may still be executed for the crime if at any time he recovers his sanity, it being understood that he was not insane at the time the crime was committed. CHARLES STEPHENS

HAD blindly wandered through that subterranean maze to one of the many exits which characterize such formations. Sometimes they end in a river, which will bubble mysteriously from what is known as a flue hole; but fortune had brought me out on my legs, although they were pretty weak at the

I was in a crater-like hollow of the hills. The place was no part of Guana-ooa. It was strange to me. Wherever looked the mountains were clothed in bush. But it was the sunlit world, and I cared for nothing else. By and by I started to climb the side of the crater. It was my intention to reach one of the summits and reconnoiter, but my It was my intention to reach one of the summits and reconnoiter, but my strength won only to a shoulder of two little hills. Here I rested again, and, following the line of least resistance, I staggered down a valley until I came to a running stream. I drank, not greatly, but because water was something to stay my stomach. Whatever was of but because water was something to stay my stomach. Whatever was of greater joy to me was the discovery of some coarse guavas and a tree laden with ripe rose-apples. The latter are eatable, but that is about all. They take their name from their flavor, which is in taste like the odor of roses. This is particularly noticeable at the first bite, but after that one might as well chew rotten wood. They were food for the gods at that moment. Then I slept. It was night when I awoke. The stars were there to assure me that I had not dreamed of my freedom. I was ill, however. Exhaustion and emptiness, succeeded by a meal of doubtful fruit, had finished the evil work. I lay there, shivering and burning, writhing in pain and vomiting, for two days. Again I lost my senses and coming ashore.

I idly watched the black fellows tossing out a fish basket or two, a net, a quantity of fish, and a few turtle with their flippers tied together under them. One of them glanced at me as he was carrying a twelve-pound hawk's bill to the but.

"Buckra look like him can know!" he without the slightest display of emotion allusions made to Miss 'Vlolet Edmands. He knew the experts were studying his every movement and utterance, but he appeared cool and calm. Only occasionally did he change his position, and then, but to swing one leg over the other. For the most partithe leaned well back in his chair and searched the faces of his examiners.

Dr. O. G. Cilley, the jail physician, who has had more opportunity than anyone else to observe the condemned man, said this morning: "I am willing to swear before any court that Richeson is as sane as I am. I could not consider myself capable of holding my position if I were not able to judge whether a man is sane or insane."

Sheriff Quinn this morning stated that Richeson would not be removed from his present quarters in the Charles street jail until tomorrow at the earliest, and he said it was possible that he might remain in his present cell until after the meeting of the executive council on Wednesday.

the hut. "Buckra look like him can know!" he reled, staring at me.

"Hullo!" I said, wondering where I came from, where I was, and who I was, I felt quite well, but my mind was a blank save for present objects.

The negro told me that I had been found by one of his companions, lying in the bush about half a mile from the hut. They took some sort of care of me, and, I suppose, nature did the rest. They presently asked me what my name was, and where I came from, where I was, and where I came from was, lifet negro told me that I had been found by one of his companions, lying in the bush about half a mile from the lut. was A. Tremlett, whoever he was. The natives could not read, but they had settled my name by calling me "Buckra"—white man.

Next day it suddenly came to me that my name was Arthur Tremlett, but beyond that I did not progress. I remember thinking one day that if I saw myrelf in a mirror I might recognize me as some one I had once known.

Early next morning, when the sea was calm as a mirror, I went to a deep, dark pool among the rocks, and Narcissus-like, had a good long look at myself. The man I saw in the water was a shabby chap, with a scared look-Are to Be Discussed

A symposium on "Alley Conditions in Washington and How to Improve Them" will be held at Shillsh Parties.

Them Them I saw in the water was a shabby chap, with a scared looking fair beard and high cheek bones. In my mind there had been some notion that Arthur Tremlett was a smooth-shaven, plump-faced lad No, I didn't know the man in the water-mirror.

And I began to doubt if I was Arthur for he told me I was an Englishman—a "blooming Englishman"—about seven times a day. But beyond that he could get nothing out of me. If he had been able to, I should have been the more pleased of the two of us. When we arrived in the East river, at New York, Henry gave me a few dollars, and with this in my pocket I left the ship.

The rest is the old story. I starved when my money was finished, for I could get no permanent work. I was not strong enough to face the cold and do hard labor, and my shabblness, coupled with my ignorance of myself, barred me from many a position which I might otherwise have got and held with credit.

It ended in my meeting a man called Bellair, who took me to a hospital. Next day I was sent to another hos-

It ended in my meeting a man called Bellair, who took me to a hospital. Next day I was sent to another hospital and put in a ward which must have been reserved for lunatics. Anyhow, there was some mistake. I was again rescued by this man Bellair, who took me to his home—a gorgeous place, after all my experiences. He fed me and loaned me money and let me sleep in his study. When I asked him why he was taking such trouble for me, he his study. When I asked him why he was taking such trouble for me, he calmly informed me that I was the Hon. Arthur Tremleti, and that my father was the Lord Dunfillayne who had just died.

Although the name sounded rather familiar, I laughed at him. He said he would explain in good time; but for the present, he said, I must leave everything to him.

I found him a very charming fellow, although somewhat mysterious, and at times morose. After the first night he the desk to instruct the clerk about having supper served in my room. A lady and gentleman blocked the way. When the gentleman turned round and I saw his face, something burst in my brain, and six months of my life stood revealed in all its horror and marvel.

The man was Ford, overseer of Guanaboa, and the lady, who, I immediately realized was his wife, was Rosalie!

I remember he spoke to me. I do not know what I replied, but I saw that he did not know me. I knew that Arthur Tremlett was dead. At least, he was dead so far as they were concerned. What difference would it make—beyond a scene—if I revealed the truth? Besides, I was too dazed. I mumbled something, and then I remember walking away. This man Bellair said:

"That's Ford, isn't it?"

As I told you before, I was too upset

As I told you before, I was too upset to note the significance of the remark, or of what he said next. It was some-thing about supper. He shook hands with me and said it was unnecessary for him to say anything more upon the sub-work. I lay there, shivering and burning, writhing in pain and vomiting, for two days. Again I lost my senses and ran rudderless.

When I came to, I was lying in the sunshine before a little bamboo wattled but set on a sandy beach and backed by a grove of tail cocoanuts. Before me was the sea—opal, blue, and purple—rippling and breathing. A dugout canoe, with two negroes in it, was just coming ashore.

Joston.

I was surprised by his manner. I had never thought of Ford as a hypocrite. I salled for England next day, so here my record ends. I must thank you. Mr. Gettys, for the kindness which you have shown to Rosalie since the tragedy which your letter describes. I can offer no comment on Mrs. Anselm's remarkable story, but I think it is the key to this extraordinary mystery. DUNFILLAYNE.
